INTRODUCTION

Lead Generation Marketing

Once we put all these elements together, we can use your various promotional channels to drive traffic to our landing page to start generating leads. Content is a great way to guide users to a landing page. Typically, we create content to provide visitors with useful, free information. The more delighted a visitor is with our content, the more likely they are to click our call-to-action (CTA) and move onto our landing page. Email is a great place to reach the people who already know our brand and product or service. It's much easier to ask them to take an action since they've previously subscribed to our list. Emails tend to be a bit cluttered, so use CTAs that have compelling copy and an eye-catching design to grab our subscriber's attention. The sole purpose of an ad is to get people to take an action. Otherwise, why spend the money? If you want people to convert, be sure that your landing page and offer match exactly what is promised in the ad, and that the action you want users to take is crystal clear. The great thing about using our blog posts to promote an offer is that we can tailor the entire piece to the end goal. So, if our offer is an instructional video on setting up Google Search Console, then we can write a blog post about how to select our marketing metrics which would make our CTA highly relevant and easy to click. Social media platforms make it easy to guide our followers to act, from the swipe up option on Instagram stories to Facebook bio links to URLs on Twitter. We can also promote our offerings on our social posts and include a call-to-action in your caption. Learn more about social media campaigns in this post.

Product Trials we can break down a lot of barriers to a sale by offering trials of our product or service. Once a prospect is using our product, we can entice them with additional offers or resources to encourage them to buy. Another good practice is to include our branding in our free versions so we can capture other potential customers, too. Referral, or word of mouth, marketing is useful for lead generation in a different way. That is, it gets our brand in front of more people, which, in turn, increases our chances of generating more leads. Whatever channel we use to generate leads, we'll want to guide users to our landing page. If we've built a landing page that converts, the rest will handle itself.

While the Internet has emerged as a retail force to be reckoned with, its' success is dependent, at least in part, on other promotional tools. One such tool is permission email marketing (PEM). Operating within the framework of the Technology Acceptance Model (TAM), this study explores the influence of PEM on the perceived value derived from Internet shopping. The results of the study indicate that PEM positively influences the perceived usefulness, ease of use and enjoyment derived from shopping online. Furthermore, it also serves to reduce the perceived risk. PEM serves as an important extension of the TAM, with the findings from this study highlighting not only what the sources of online shopping value are, but also how they can be influenced.<sup>10</sup>

DISCUSSION

Why not just buy leads? Marketers and sales people alike want to fill their sales funnel – and they want to fill it quickly. Enter: The temptation to buy leads. Buying leads, as opposed to organically generating them, is much easier and takes far less time and effort, despite being more expensive. But we might be paying for advertising anyway so, why not just buy leads? First and foremost, any leads we've purchased don't know you. Typically, they've "opted in" at some other site when signing up for something and didn't opt into receiving anything from our company.

The messages we send them are therefore unwanted messages, and sending unwanted messages is intrusive. If the prospect has never been to our website and indicated an interest in our products or services, then we're interrupting them plain and simple. If they never opted in to receive messages specifically from us, then there's a high chance they could flag our messages as spam, which is quite dangerous for us. Not only does this train to filter out emails from us, but it also indicates to their email provider which emails to filter out. Once enough people flag our messages as spam, you go on a "blacklist," which is then shared with other email providers. Once we get on the blacklist, it's really, hard to get back off it. In addition, our email deliverability and IP reputation will likely be harmed. It's always, always, always better to

CONCLUSION

Social media has become prominent in the 21st century. Companies are persistently looking for ways to utilize this new platform within their marketing strategies to increase business growth. Since social media is a networking and communication platform, it is important for companies to create a voice to humanize the business and maintain foot traffic. Although there are studies on how to use social media marketing within a business, there is minimal corroboration available of how social media marketing activities influence a consumer's buying behavior.
